About the Sierra Region of Nevada: Nevada's Sierra Region is the Silver State's third largest metropolitan area, includes Lake Tahoe's south shore, and encompasses a diverse set of industry sectors such as manufacturing, agriculture, mining, health care, aerospace, logistics, tourism, and many others. It has a land mass of 7,009 square miles and a population over 165,450.

Within the region's boundaries are three small urban cities – Carson City, Fernley and Yerington, over twenty-five unincorporated towns, many rural areas, and seven of Nevada's twenty-seven Tribal communities. One U.S. Metropolitan Statistical Area (MSA) – Carson City and two U.S. Micropolitan Statistical Areas (μSAs) – Fernley (Lyon County) and Gardnerville-Ranchos (Douglas County) – are also part of the region.

Though the Sierra Region is very large geographically, its communities are all interconnected and interdependent. What affects one area, town, city or county, affects the entire region. This is quite different from traditional urban areas where economic impacts tend to be concentrated within a more compact geographic area. It is the reason that NNDA takes a regional approach to economic development for achieving successful growth of the region's economic ecosystem.

The total investment of just under $1.8 million in the Sierra Region, between 2014 – 2021, will help expand the region's industrial space inventory.
